FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

How Do We Teach Children About War?

A Wounded Warrior—Who Just Happens To Be A Rabbit— Finds A New Way To Serve His Country

A wounded warrior—who just happens to be a rabbit—gets a second chance and finds a new way to serve his country.

Sound the trumpet! Woodley Books, LLC, is proud to announce the publication of a picture book, Ajax Bound for Glory, for young readers. This touching story of perseverance and hope is the result of a unique collaboration between two sisters in San Diego, CA. This is their way of sharing patriotism with a new generation of young Americans.

Art student Hannah Dautel, and History major Sarah Dautel, created Ajax Bound for Glory for young readers.

The sprightly Ajax, descended from Bunny Prince Charlie and Rabbit E. Lee, dreams of serving his country as a Rabbit Ranger. He attends The Academy where he studies the art of war until one night...his right foot is blown off in a training accident. During his long recovery process, when Ajax discovers Grandfather's trumpet, he finds a new purpose in life—though injury took away his hop, it can't take away his hope.

Original and upbeat, Ajax Bound for Glory introduces children to the many faces of military service, and showcases the important role of military music in war and peace.

This family story is an innovation for Woodley Books, LLC, a memoir publisher. With its gentle telling and its clear illustrations, it is a powerful tool to introduce discussions of disappointment and disaster. Working with a team, Ajax learns an important patriotic message. The song that comes with the story gives children a chance to celebrate America with marching and singing.
